North Caicos is known for tall trees and small farms of corn, cassava, beans and okra. Entrepreneurs are branching into landscape gardens and fruit orchards. Also the home of the finest Caicos slop builders on the sea. The shallow waters of Bottle Creek are a favourite for bonefishing, kayaking, birdwatching and isolated picnics. Wades Green was one of the most successful Loyalist era plantations. A walking tour of the well preserved ruins is a one mile gentle hike over old roadways.

Over 190 species of birds have been sighted in TCI including the rare West Indian whistling duck, greater flamingo, Cuban crow, osprey, reddish egret, frigate bird, tropic bird, pelican, kestrel, tern, sandpipers, Bahama woodstar, bananaquits and owls.

Middle Caicos was inhabited by Tainos (Lucayan Indians) from 750-1500 AD, until Spanish enslavement destroyed their civilization and decimated their numbers. British Loyalists established huge plantations in the Caicos Islands (late 1780s) and grew cotton/sisal for only one generation. The majority abandoned their lands when slavery was outlawed and the true difficulties of farming on these isolated islands became apparent, leaving their lands to the workers - land now known as generational properties.

Middle Caicos is known for preserving TCI culture, local artisans make beautiful handcrafts, bush medicine is collected, folklore is alive and cultural traditions are still appreciated. Middle Caicos has the best tasting conch in all the Islands!
